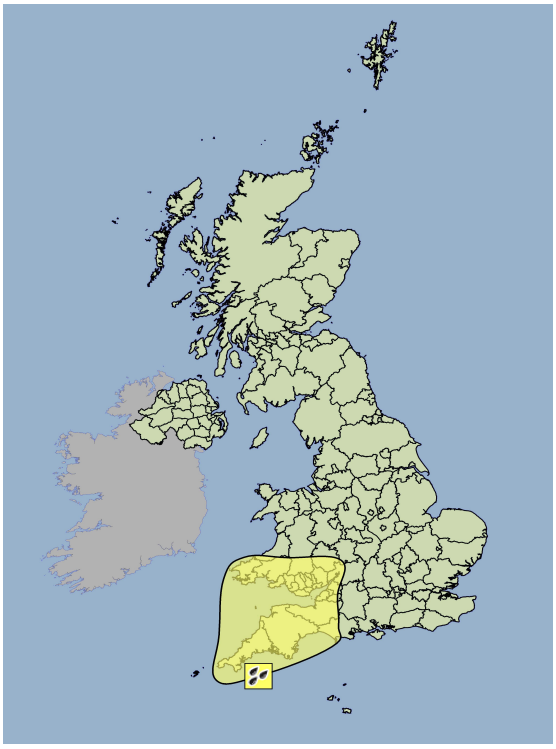
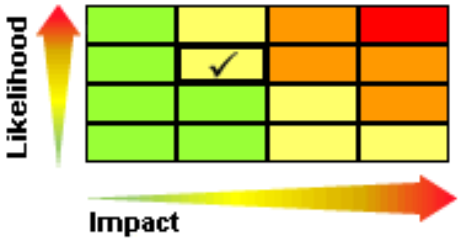
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
An active frontal system will move in from the west later on Wednesday, bringing a spell of heavy rain followed by some heavy showers. Rainfall accumulations of 15 to 25 mm are likely quite widely, with locally 30 to 40 mm over south-facing hills. With most of this falling in around 6 hours there is the likelihood of some surface water flooding, whilst some river flooding is also likely across Cornwall and Devon.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 16:00 on Wed, 06th Jan 2016 until 08:00 on Thu, 07th Jan 2016

A band of heavy rain will move in from the west, arriving in Cornwall late on Wednesday afternoon, then affecting the rest of southwest England and south Wales through the evening and overnight, before clearing from most areas towards dawn on Thursday.

Please be aware of the likelihood of some flooding, with some travel disruption possible and flooding of roads. In addition, strong south to southeasterly winds will reach gale force for a time around exposed coasts and hills.
